

Do you find it difficult to get the right people for the job?
Do you need better prepared job applicants to fit with your business?

If your answer is yes, you should be talking to specialist employment charity Tomorrow's People

Tomorrow's People is a national charity that since 1984 has been training unemployed people and bringing them together with local businesses. We provide links into potential employees with updated skills, who are highly motivated and ready for the challenge of a new job. We place people into jobs that exist, rather than creating new jobs and we save employers time and money by finding them the right people for their job.

In 24 years, Tomorrow's People has helped over 400,000 long-term unemployed people on their journey back to work. Most importantly for businesses, we have a strong record of getting people into work and keeping them there - 90% of the people we help find a job are still in employment after three months and 76% (81% in London) are still working twelve months on.

Tomorrow's People works with candidates directly in local communities, offering training and advice, confidence building, job search support, CV writing, and interview techniques. We show candidates how to get the skills and qualifications that local employers are looking for.

Most importantly, once someone gets a job, we stay in contact with them and their employer over the long term to make sure that success is permanent.

Why we need local employers

We depend on our links with local businesses to match our clients with their temporary and permanent placements. We're looking to work in partnership with companies in this area who are willing to consider our candidates first for suitable vacancies and work experience placements. All candidates put forward will have undertaken pre-vocational guidance and training before they are put forward for a position.
